

The rights of consumers to record television content for personal use are well established with the original challenges of the VCR and should not be curtailed just because it is technically possible to do so with HDTV now.